Faculty Curricular Support Program Overview

The main objective of the Faculty Curricular Support Program is to support film, television, video, journalism, behavioral health and social media/digital communications faculty in Southwestern Pennsylvania-based colleges, universities, and community colleges to teach the Mental Health Depictions for Storytellers, Mental Health Reporting for Journalists or Mental Health Campaigns for Digital Strategists one-hour class during the 2015 academic year.

Participating faculty will perform the following activities:

- Review the film/video/TV or journalism or social media PPT and notes to individual slides as well as other resources on the website prior to teaching the class
- Teach at minimum a one-hour class using EIC’s curricular resources as part of an existing course or as a separate class for students
- Spread the word about the Generation Next competition within your department/program, and encourage students to participate by applying online at www.eiconline.org/swpa/gen-next by March 31, 2015 for the Spring Semester.
- Ask students who attended the one-hour class to take the online Generation Next survey available on the website
- Attend the Southwestern Pennsylvania Media & Mental Health Mentoring session.

Faculty participation will be accepted on an on-going. Faculty will have access to vetted resource materials to include in their curricula beyond the campaign. Materials can continue to be used in the classroom, student orientations, and health fairs beyond the campaign.

To apply, please fill out the Faculty Curricular Support application on the website. EIC will contact you upon receipt of your application.
